While gathering data for the Account Books project, I came across some interesting and unusual items. For example: when white gathering data for the Account Books project, I came across some interesting and uniqual neitis. For example, when did printed account books first have lined columns, the first use of "atters," the first time an unusual expression or item was encountered, BMDs, etc. The account books showed very little production or consumption of beer, so I noted those entries. General store account books showed very few firearm sales, so those are noted. These items were recorded in the spreadsheet for each society but the final format did not allow space for that extra data. So that information is presented here. Account books can contain unusual, useful, and interesting information.

The abbreviations used are:

B: births D: deaths

D. ucauss

FR: a family record of the account book's owner (family BMDs)

good data: better than the average account book

M: marriages

A Collection Name or Date with a strikethrough indicates that item was not an account book and does not appear in the final published book.

Any unusual words or call numbers are explained in the Account Books introduction (part of the Account Books Sample located where this PDF file resides).

Some of the items below do not have dates and/or locations. This data was not recorded initially because the book was not an account book, and subsequently that information was not located on the societies' websites.

I did not examine every account book listed in the published books, so any of those unexamined account books could contain data as illustrated in the $extra\ data$ spreadsheet below.
